Excerpt from Juvenile Instructor, Vol. 38: January 1, 1903 I put the following rules in the order I name because they cost nothing to possess, only the effort to put them in practice: First on the list is politeness and punctuality. I make the bold assertion that it is impossible for a young man not to succeed in life who is habitually polite and punctual. Nothing is more winning than politeness; nothing is more admired than punctuality. The most learned or the most ignorant win their way when they possess and practice these adorning qualities; the first wins the heart, the next the confidence of our friends. The punctual boy keeps his word, meets all his obligations, is al ways relied upon, and is always trusted. To be trusted and relied upon is the first step to success.
