Excerpt from The City College Quarterly, Vol. 10: June, 1914 The College of to-day no longer consists of two quaint and picturesque Gothic structures connected by an aerial isthmus, and housing a student body of adolescents intent on a traditional curriculum from nine to half past one each day in the academic year. It is now a group of modern buildings with equipment designed to meet the specific educational needs of a student body composed not only of youths, but of adult men and women seeking the higher values in the day s work which come from more scientific professional training.
