Excerpt from Residential Property Value and Rent Impact Analysis for Copley Place Development The objective of this study is to assess the impact which the proposed $300 million Copley Place mixed use development might have upon the housing market in the South End, Back Bay, Fenway and Bay Village, particularly on rents and property values. Overall, we believe the impact of Copley Place upon residential rents and property values within the impact area will be modest, because the Copley Place demand element (11-15 of average annual demand) is relatively small compared to the total average annual demand element and also because it represents a very small percentage of the stock of housing within the impact area units). Further, the area has matured greatly since the Prudential Center was constructed and is less likely to realize any induced impact from the project. In addition, the demand element within the impact area will be regulated to a large extent by the high housing prices within the area. Finally, the price of housing is a function of a great many variables as evidenced by our study of property values in the impact area, and inflationary forces, increased transportation costs and the increasing demand for real estate ownership (most recently for condominiums) are all likely to have a significant impact upon housing prices in the impact area. The largest impact upon the housing market as a result of Copley Place will occur outside of the impact area in neighborhoods where the prevailing rent structure is more commensurate with the salaries of the projects employees, the majority of whom will be non-professional.
