The three Rs are reading, writing, and arithmetic. SON: Why do they call them the three Rs Two of those words dont even begin with an R. FATHER: Well, they do have an R in common. Why Do We Have to Go to School is a 10, 000 word fictional dialogue between a young man and his father. A fascinating debate evolves after the son asks, Dad, why do we have to go to school This lively and captivating conversation serves as a thought-provoking discussion on the current status of educational policy and practice - specifically, regarding the use and role of technology in the classroom. It is beautifully decorated with related icons and word blocks. This artistic touch shows how books have evolved with technology, which closely parallels one of the themes from the dialogue.
