Excerpt from Colman and Wheelock: Or, the Early Called of the Burman Mission Meantime, an extensive fire had destroyed the greater part of the town. Bursting out in several places at once, it proved itself to be designed, and the light, frail bamboo houses, with their roofs of thatch, disappeared rapidly before the flames. We do not find, however, that the Mission house was destroyed. A retired spot in the outskirts of the town, it escaped the general wreck.
