By Professor D T Ansted

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Scenery, Science and Art: Being Extracts From the Note-Book of a Geologist and Mining Engineer It is a pretty sight to stand on one of the bridges between two huge kilns and look at the yawning chasm, partly formed by nature, but greatly enlarged by man, on both sides of which are numerous groups of quarrymen actively boring, blasting, and removing the massive limestone, carting it into little wagons, and bringing it up the inclined planes to feed the insatiable mouths that stand ever open for the reception of fresh supplies. Here and there a jagged Odd-shaped rock projects from the earth, and may be seen to be a cherty or ?inty portion of the rock left behind by the water when eating out a passage between the limestone on the two sides. At a distance one sees curious banded portions, and on approaching nearer a large number of white crystalline streaks, which the practised eye of the geologist at once recognises as connected with fossils, the remains of the inhabitants of the ocean, when these hard rocks were mere...
