Exposed: Desire and Disobedience in the Digital Age

By Bernard E. Harcourt

Harvard University Press. Hardcover. Condition: New. 304 pages. Social media compile data on users, retailers mine information on consumers, Internet giants create dossiers of who we know and what we do, and intelligence agencies collect all this plus billions of communications daily. Exploiting our boundless desire to access everything all the time, digital technology is breaking down whatever boundaries still exist between the state, the market, and the private realm. Exposed offers a powerful critique of our new virtual transparency, revealing just how unfree we are becoming and how little we seem to care. Bernard Harcourt guides us through our new digital landscape, one that makes it so easy for others to monitor, profile, and shape our every desire. We are building what he calls the expository society a platform for unprecedented levels of exhibition, watching, and influence that is reconfiguring our political relations and reshaping our notions of what it means to be an individual. We are not scandalized by this. To the contrary: we crave exposure and knowingly surrender our privacy and anonymity in order to tap into social networks and consumer convenience or we give in ambivalently, despite our reservations. But we have arrived at a moment of reckoning....

Reviews

I actually started looking over this publication. It really is rally interesting throug studying period. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.
