Excerpt from Metal-Mine Accidents in the United States, During the Calendar Year 1919: With Supplemental Labor and Accident Tables for the Years 1911 to 1919, Inclusive The metal-mining industry during 1919 was marked by unusual depression, the quantity of minerals produced, the number of persons employed, and the period of their employment all being much reduced. A gratifying feature of the depression, however, was the great decrease in the number of fatalities and injuries and the lower accident rates based upon the number of employees. Fewer men lost their lives in metal-mine accidents during 1919 than in any previous year for which reports of accidents have been received by the Bureau of Mines. The nonfatal injuries, also, showed a marked decrease not only from the record of the year before but also from that of any year since 1914. According to reports received by the Bureau of Mines from mine operators, covering the calendar year 1919, the number of employees was a decrease of or about 20 per cent, below 1918. The total working time for all employees was equivalent to man-days of labor, or an average of 281 days for each employee; these figures indicate a decrease of per cent and per cent, respectively, from the record for the previous year. The number of men killed was 468 and the number injured was as compared with 646 killed and injured in 1918.
