Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Temperance in the American Congress Long before the hour announced for the opening of the meeting, the spacious galleries of the Representative Chamber were filled to their utmost capacity, in response to the call of the Executive Committee, by citizens of Washington and sojourners from different States and Territories of the Union, and by seven o'clock the reserved seats on the floor of the Hall were all taken by Senators, Representatives, and their families. After which the Chairman addressed the meeting as follows: Address Of Hon. Henry Wilson, Of Massachusetts.adies And Gentlemen - Several members of the Senate and House of Representatives, mindful of the measureless evils and sorrows of intemperance, have formed a society, in which we have pledged each to the other, and all to country and to God, to put from us forever the fatal cup of intoxication.
