THE JOYFUL TECHNO-TARD

Apricot Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 63 pages. Dimensions: 18.2in. x 13.8in. x 0.4in. A pretty cool book for all us low-tech people living in this high-tech world. In the Roman Empire, around the year 5 AD, times were changing. The Pax Romana had created security, freedoms, and opportunities previously unheard of. A group of inventors exhibited a new invention for Caesar Augustus—a crude steam engine with multiple applications (apps). After a season of considering the benefits of the steam engine, Caesar concluded to have it destroyed. His reasoning: It would put thousands of unskilled and uneducated people out of work. So, it would be sixteen hundred years before the world would have its steam engine. In a slightly different way and considering computers instead of steam engines, this book takes a new and hopefully light-hearted look at Caesar's dilemma. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg, OR, La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
