Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Sixth Annual Distinguished Lectures in Special Education and Rehabilitation: Summer Session, 1967 Now I was fostering a theory. A rather impressive theory, not new an emotional factor fighting contraction or enhancing dilation, that Operated in the face of the light to keep the stutters pupils from contracting as rapidly as when he was not stuttering, when he was talking freely or sitting there silently. So that was about the first time that we were up against the problem of what comes first, the hen or the egg. Here was something that clearly, sharply, statistically, neurologically, differentiated the stutterer from the normal speaker in a subtle expression. In a sense, it had nothing to do with speech directly. So we had advanced from studying speech organs to studying the organism, thinking maybe the answer to stuttering would not be found in the diaphragm, or in the intercostal muscles, or in the vocal cords, but would be found in the human being somewhere in a big ger, deeper sense. And we had found something, but we had to leave it right like that. We didn t know whether the pupil stayed up in the face of stuttering because stuttering was the result of an emotion, or whether stuttering produced an emotional reaction and that s what kept the pupils up. Possibly the inhibition of contraction had nothing to do with the cause of stuttering; it had everything to do with the person s reaction to the stuttering. So we stuck there as we have been stuck many times since. And then I had developed another first I had developed equipment to record electrical potentials from muscles which were called action potentials....
