Excerpt from The Rebound: A Comedy in One Act Louis-Benot Picard was born at Paris in 1769. Though he was educated for the law, he soon decided to abandon that profession and write plays. His first venture was a collaboration - Le Badinage dangereux - which was produced in 1789. Essentially a man of the theater, Picard learned through his experiences as manager, director, and playwright, to write plays which were full of immediate appeal. Many of his plays, however, have through their inherent charm and wit and humor, outlasted the age for which they were written. Les Ricochets - The Rebound - was a special favorite with the author who says of it: The idea of the piece is ingenious and true to life: the execution, too, it seems to me, is good. It is a picture in miniature of all society looked at from a curious point of view. The costumes and setting are late eighteenth century.
