Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: .and he went out. Have you come from infected houses, my daughter? asked Madame de Haupt, then do not stay here, come into the courtyard, for contagion might be dangerous for the wounded, and without a thought of the peril she might herself incur, she seized her daughter s hand to draw her into the court. I changed my clothes before coming here, mother, said Gertrude gently, but I wanted to ask you to take care of my little William this evening, as I am going back to the low quarter. Pain has taken possession of those unfortunates, and there is no one to nurse the sick; they are thrown out of doors like dogs, and many talk of giving themselves up to the Spaniards. It is of importance to calm them, and besides, some one must care for the plague-stricken. Have you asked your husband's permission, my daughter? said Madame de Haupt unfalteringly, although a deadly paleness overspread her face. I met Adrian in the most infected house, said Gertrude smiling, so he dared not scold me, but William, my mother, and the young wife's voice trembled a little. I will watch over him, my child; farewell, may the Lord be thy shield, my daughter, and with a look which equalled a blessing, Madame de Haupt quitted her daughter to return to her wounded, while Gertrude again took her way towards the low quarter, saluted at every step, now by complaints, now by...
