*Merely no terms to spell out. We have read through and i also am confident that i will gonna read yet again again in the future. You will not sense monotony at anytime of your own time (that's what catalogs are for about should you question me).

HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY, VOL. 3 (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. 684 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.6in. IN the last chapter (Vol. I. xiv.) we discussed the formation of lymph through the walls of the blood capillaries, and the physiology of the lymphoid tissues and organs (which continually pour out new cells, as well as the chemical products of their anabolism and katabolism, into the lymph and blood stream), and referred in general terms to the physiological concept of the so-called secretory processes. If secretion means every alteration by the tissue-cells of the medium in which they live either by the removal from it of all the materials required for their nutrition, or by the return to it of all the products of their metabolism we should obviously have to admit that every living cell, as such, exhibits secretory activity (Brown-Sequard). But the concept of secretion must be taken in a more restricted sense. The term secretory is not applied to the cells which form the nervous and muscular tissues, nor, speaking generally, to the active and passive mechanisms of sensation and movement, while it is used of the histological elements that participate actively in the production and purification of the blood and lymph, particularly the epithelia.
