FBC LTD, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Poultry and Egg Situation: Nov.-Dec. 1952 The usual seasonal variation in egg prices -from a low in the Spring to a high in the fall- is well known. To a considerable degree commercial egg producers have taken advantage of it by producing the largest practical proportion of their annual egg production in the fall months. By taking advantage of early hatching, artificial illumination in the months of diminishing daylight, and better breeding that keeps yearling layers producing longer into their second fall, farmers are producing more eggs in the months when eggs previously had been scarce. While this was -and still is- to the advantage of the individual egg producer, it has markedly reduced the premium that producers now get for fall and winter production. thirty years ago the season peak of farm egg prices normally came in December and it was more than twice as high as the Springtime low point} Now the United States average egg price usually reaches a peak about October or November, and the peak level is only one-third higher than the normal springtime low.
