Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Alexander Hamilton: A Study of the Revolution and the Union; An Address Delivered Before the Students of the University of Michigan, December 10, 1880 Ladies and Gentlemen: Revolutions, like all other social phenomena, are evolved out of preexisting conditions. They spring from the action of antecedent forces. When these forces are present the revolution follows as naturally and inevitably as a conflagration bursts forth from the impact of heat with combustibles. In the seemingly irregular course of human society certain tendencies appear; they gather head; they become confluent with other tendencies of a like or contradictory nature; they break the barriers which are imposed to restrain them, and sweep away the political outlines of the past. It is thus that the old forms of society are uprooted, that old institutions are prostrated in the dust, and that old customs are destroyed. Without the antecedent forces, no revolution can exist, any more than an uncaused phenomenon can be found in physical nature. With the preexisting conditions, the revolution is as sure to appear as the sun is to rise, or the tides to follow the moon. It must be understood as a primary truth that the political cataclysms and social disturbances of mankind occur in obedience to a law which prevails alike in the plant, the animal, and the man - the law of progress by evolution, involving the destruction of the old form by the undergrowth of the new.
