Excerpt from Music, Physical Education: 1919; Report of Progress The general supervision of the entire course was under an executive committee consisting of a principal, a supervisor, and a superintendent of the training department of a normal school. Each subject was in charge of a special committee consisting of teachers, principals and supervisors with the teachers largely predominating. While the number of teachers on these committees was made as large as possible in order to secure the benefit of class room experience, not all were able to participate in the work on account of the lack of time and facilities for reaching them. Much credit is due all who have so willingly and efficiently assisted in bringing this course of study to its present standard. The fact that it is an outgrowth of the best class-room practice in the city is due largely, however, to the teachers who helped in its construction.
