J* The date on several of the early gravestones in the Baptist burying ground at Dividing Creek would indicate that it was used for burials before the Revolutionary war. The custom of burying on private grounds was not uncommon and doubtless many of the early residents were laid to rest in unmarked graves on their own estates. So too, in this old yard were many burials unrecorded, some unmarked. Save for rough native stones. This burying ground is still used for interments, and the inscriptions contained herein were copied from the early stones, and are mostly of persons born previous to 1800.
