

Phone Man Seeks the Earwig A Techie Hero Novel

By Thomas P. Hanna

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 218 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in. In private Bint Uldrich calls himself Phone Man because he had invented a device that lets him transport through the landline phone wires to distant places where he can look out, reach out of the phone, or even emerge from it entirely to thwart bad guys, do good, or simply note and report back about who is where and the current conditions at the end site. Here Uldrich uses his invention to try to stop a woman using small stolen items that if one is forcibly put into a victims left ear gives the person with a special communicator device close to total control of the actions of that otherwise innocent and unwilling person. She seems to be using different people in a scheme to get rich by making herself sole heir to a fortune and then eliminating its current owners. She murders several people after they have served her purposes and then crudely gouges the devices from their heads to protect her secrets. The damage to the victims seen at autopsy leads to the police calling her the Earwig...
