And I reflected, as I looked at it, that there were thousands of men who had made that same journey or its equivalent on foot, and had in addition fought and labored on the way, who were stronger, therefore, than oak and iron--of which that wagon was, constructed--and that of such men, almost wholly, was composed the army that swept from Chattanooga to Goldsboro. I then comprehended a strong conviction held by my father, that had a controlling influence on many of his operations that I have attempted to describe; which was, his supreme confidence in the ability of his army, due to his lofty estimate of the material of which it was composed. That he had been deemed worthy to command such an army and had won its confidence, was to him--far beyond his strategic achievements--the source of his greatest pride and highest satisfaction. After the singing of Marching Through Georgia, the President introduced General John W. Noble, of St. Louis, who spoke as follows: , I express, Mr. President, best the conviction of this assembly when I say that they have heard tonight from the lips of the son of our illustrious General, former President of our Society, one of the most graphic statements of the last marches of his father and the most lucid exposition of the patriotic sentiments that led him to the conclusion of the armistice he made, that has yet been presented...
