Excerpt from In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit: Maury I. Diggs, Plaintiff in Error Vs. The United States of America, Defendant in Error; Opening Brief on Behalf of Plaintiff in Error F. Drew Caminetti was two years younger and was a clerk in the State Capitol. Marsha Warrington was a stenographer working in Sacramento. Lola Norris was a clerk employed in the State Library at Sacramento. Marsha Warrington was introduced under an assumed name on the streets of Sacramento to Diggs. She was introduced to him by a saloon-keeper named Monty Austin. This saloon-keeper owned a half interest in a saloon in Sacramento, but before the trial disposed of his interest, left the State and was out of the State at the time of the trial. Immediately upon her introduction under these circumstances, Marsha Warrington jumped into the automobile that Diggs was then driving and, with this Monty Austin, went out for a ride visiting some of the road houses. Lola Norris and Marsha Warrington were chums. These two, with the two young men, went out together on automobile trips, visiting road houses, drinking, etc. The evidence discloses that a month before the trip to Reno all four went on an automobile trip to San Francisco. Diggs and Marsha Warrington registered as man and wife at the Grand Hotel in that city under an assumed name and occupied a room together all night.
