Of the war, the Whig pulse-feelers joined with the common herd 111 order to ascertain the current of popular sympathy. They soon perceived that the hero of Buena Vista was the favorite of all circles; The old coon dropped Harry of the West, for Rough and Ready. The Democrats nominated Lewis Cass, and the Free Soilers the renegade and wire-worker, Martin Van Buren The Democrats thought that the competency of Mr. Cass would out balance General Taylor s popularity, but in this they were mistaken. Taylor was elected President in 1848. He was totally ignorant of the affairs of government; he had never held a civil office, and for upwards of thirty -five years he did not vote. Written law he knew nothing about, and cared less. The arbitrary and tyrannical military code was his study and practice and from it he should have never been taken, to be made a tool of by political demagogues. The best that can be said of him and his brief administration is, that they done no harm. The Democrats anticipated a defeat, but the subtleties and false colorings of Whigs plainly indicated that their party was on its last legs. The renegade Democrats and Free Soilers that voted for Taylor received all the cast-away crumbs of the spoils which Whigs would not have. The hero of several hard fought battles, found Washington a hotter place than any. He died before one -third of his term had expired; and Mill Fillmore succeeded him in office. His administration imparted new vitality and...
