Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 1.4in.Excerpt from The American Year-Book of Medicine and Surgery: Being a Yearly Digest of Scientific Progress and Authoritative Opinion in All Branches of Medicine and Surgery, Drawn From Journals, Monographs, and Text Books of the Leading American and Foreign Authors and InvestigatorsChas. McBurney makes some interesting remarks concerning the practice of aseptic surgery. The aseptic surgeon is not alone satisfied with removing all the bacteria from everything which is to come in contact with the wound, but he also endeavors to avoid the creation of a single condition favorable to germ life, such, for instance, as the accumulation of blood- clot in the wound. McBurney strongly advocates the employment of thin rubber gloves, and considers them absolutely essential to the practice of aseptic surgery. Boiling renders gloves perfectly sterile. With a little experience the surgeons sense of touch is not interfered with. Care should be taken to see that the glove fits perfectly. It is stated that the fingers of the surgeon who constantly employs gloves will always be free from the thick, horny epithelial layer which is so commonly seen on the hands of those who rely upon chemicals for sterilization. During the operation gloves can be more readily cleansed than can the surgeons hands. Another advantage in the use of gloves is that the handling of the tissues produces much less damage than when the naked hands are used. During 5 years McBurney has done no operation with bare hands. The forearms of the surgeon should be covered with snug-fitting sleeves made of some sterile material so that the bare arms do not come in contact with the wound or instruments. The greatest care should be taken in the making of...
