Lastly, as it is very desirable that those establishments which are the most completely devoted to the imparting of true technical instruction should not neglect to join to it those portions of general instruction which the pupils, according to their position, ought to possess, it is right that the masters engaged to impart general instruction, properly so called, --but those only, --should be obliged to comply with the prescriptions of the Law of 1850. It was in this spirit that the Commission adopted the following resolutions, which apply also to every description of technical instruction; to schools for children and apprentices, as well as to lectures and classes for adults. Technical instruction comprises not only the exhibition of the applications of science to industry and the practice of the processes employed in the arts, but also the demonstrations of elementary principles and the scientific knowledge connected with it. Every French subject who has attained his majority may create and carry on an establishment for technical instruction of various kinds, without preliminary proof of capacity. However, if he wishes to add to this technical instruction those subjects which form the object of general instruction, he must fulfil, either personally or through the masters to whom he intrusts such branches, the conditions imposed by the laws and the regulations on public instruction. (24th sitting.) It is evident likewise that the disabilities...
