Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Thanksgiving Sermon: Delivered at St. John s Church, Georgetown The mountains shall bring peace to the people. - psalm lxxii: 3. IT was one of the loveliest evenings in the month of June when, on a day and hour not easily forgotten, I began the ascent of Mount Vesuvius. The mountain was in a state of extreme agitation, and the flames that issued from its summit gave it the effect of a vast torch suspended in mid-air over the bay and City of Naples. During the earlier part of the ascent, what chiefly struck the eye was the marvellous luxuriance with which foliage, fruits and flowers were blended, or, rather, heaped together upon the mountain side. At every step the vine, the fig tree and the olive entwined their branches above, in one triumphal arch, converting the road into an endless bower. This was due to the lava beds that lay below, and still more to the quickening heat of the fires that raged and roared within. These were the forces and these the agencies that produced that teeming and luxuriant landscape. How much that man calls destructive, both in the natural and moral world, is really, in the highest sense, creative. In the order of the divine Providence, beauty springs from ashes, and the oil of joy from mourning. Just above this region of marvellous fertility the gentle slope changed suddenly to a steep and abrupt ascent. Ashes lay piled upon the path like snow-drifts, causing the traveller to sink knee deep at almost every step. A gloomy and arid plain succeeded, lighted only by the lurid glare of the stream of lava that rolled through it,...
