Excerpt from Rambles on the Golden Coast of the South Island of New Zealand The Nineteenth Century is an Age of Travel. Every accessible point of interest and coigne of vantage on the universal globe is becoming, year by year, a scene of pilgrimage for increasing bands of tourists. Journeyings and wanderings to and fro, which, to the past generation, would have seemed daring deeds and enterprises of great pith and moment, are in these days of progression deemed but ordinary occurrences. Given but the means, the way is clear to the tourist, even to the nethermost parts of the earth. New Zealand, the Britain of the South, admittedly presents a diversity of scenery, unsurpassed in its variety, magnificence, and grandeur, by any other part of the world. It is, in sooth, a land of picturesque wonders, wherein the admirer of the sublime may look from Nature up to Natures God in never-ceasing awe and admiration. Foremost in its wide and long continuing stretch of panoramic beauty, forest and glade, and hill and dale, mountains overtopping mountains, Ossa piled upon Pilion, woodland, lakes, wide brimming rivers, and deep-sea sounds, cleaving their way into wild solitudes - offspring of the mighty Pacific wooing in their homes the Sylvan deities - stands the West Coast of the South Island. Time was, and not so long since, when its solitudes were untrodden by European footsteps. The mariner, scudding along the coast, viewed from afar off the stupendous mountain system rising, apparently, from the very bosom of the sea, and cared not for closer vicinage, save when driven by stress of wind or tempest, of which few save himself knew the extent and beauty. Gold, the all-potent...
