Excerpt from How to Teach and Learn Modern Languages Successfully, Especially French, and Its Teaching at School I confess my weakness. I also had determined to write a grammar - a grammar that should throw into the shade everything that had been previously achieved - but the sight of the voluminous catalogue disheartened me; in short, it convinced me that success in that line was impossible. I threw my pen away in despair. But, on examining the list of French works once more, an idea occurred to me, whether a good one or no, I leave to others to decide. Finding that books which give practical hints as to the method of teaching modern languages are not to be found in the said catalogue, I determined upon supplying that want by giving, in the present little volume, my own experience, not only in teaching, but also in learning several languages, and pointing out in this manner, to teachers and students, how to teach, and how to learn modern languages.
