Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Large Print. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .I lived on a 90-acre farm, with about 35 acres of pasture. The house had a front room, dining room, kitchen, and two bedrooms. The kitchen had a pan for a table and a bucket of water to wash the dishes and prepare food. A wood burning cook stove and some shelves were built for pots, pans, and dishes. The front living room had some chairs, a wood burning stove for heat in the winter and some coal oil (kerosene) lamps for light. The dining room had a table, some chairs, a bench and flour can. If someone visited us, we used the flour can for a chair. There was no electricity. All the lights, stoves and everything else used coal oil, coal, or wood for fuel. There was no refrigerator, so we bought ice at the store and kept it in an icebox to keep it from melting too fast. There was a radio, but it was powered with expensive batteries that didn t last very long, so it was only used for special events. There weren t any bathrooms or running water. To take a bath, water was drawn from the well, carried to the house, then heated on the cook stove and poured into a washtub. Everyone took a bath in the same water. To use the toilet everyone went to the outhouse. Toilet papers were pages torn from a Sears catalog. There was no washing machine or clothes dryer, so my mom heated water outside in a big cast iron pot that had a place for firewood under it. She washed clothes in a washtub with lye soap and a rubbing board,...
