Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Keene and Vicinity, Its Points of Interest, and Its Representative Business Men, Embracing Keene, Hinsdale, Winchester, Marlboro, Walpole, Swanzezy and Charlestown Before be left that town the snow began to fall, but be pushed on as rapidly as possible and reached Winchester in safety. By this time the snow was deep on the ground and was covered by an icy crust that would not bear his horse but would cut its legs as it broke through at every step. The few settlers at Winchester tried to dissuade him from proceeding, telling him he might as well expect to die in Northfield and rise again in Upper Ashuelot, as ride thither on horseback. We are not informed what his views were on the subject of death and resurrection, but judging from his action he believed in the transmigration of bodies as some others do in the transmigration of souls, for, after refreshing bis horse and himself and securing the precious meal more firmly than ever, he made a desperate attempt to reach his waiting friends in the upper township. But in vain; the obstacles were more than flesh and blood could overcome, and after trying the endurance of his horse to the uttermost he reluctantly gave it up, and finally made his way to Wrentham, where much to his relief he was subsequently joined by Blake and Smeed, who had abandoned the settlement and journeyed thither on snow shoes. Before leaving they had so far as possible looked after the welfare of the oxen by placing all the hay within their leach, but they feared the quantity would be insufficient, and so returned as early as...
