Excerpt from The Academy, Vol. 1: Monthly Journal of Salem Female Academy; March, 1878 Shortly after eight o'clock the monks were summoned to the last of the six daily services of the convent. This is held in the monastery itself and is conducted in the German language, while for the others the choir of the adjoining church is used and the language is Latin. I was permitted to attend and was shown into a queer triangular, windowless apartment. There was a row of desks with kneeling-benches on each side of the room, both converging toward the desk of the prior, which stood in a little vaulted recess opposite the door. The monks quietly took their places at their desks, in kneeling posture. A dark, room, and dark robed men with black cowls on their heads, made up a sombre scene, scarcely relieved by the single light beside the reader. Several penitential psalms were read and all joined in the refrains. At the close, the prior pronounced the benediction, and besprinkled each one, as he passed out, (excepting me) with holy water. Thus closed the convent-day, and each betook himself to his cell. The prior led me through long corridors, ornamented with gloomy paintings, - the stations of our Saviour's suffering, from Gethsemane to Calvary. Opening the door of the cell I was to occupy, and supplying me, at my request, with a copy of the rules of St. Benedict, he bid me a kindly good - night.
