He has allowed his father's beatings of his sister, Maria, to continue for years. Yet one hot summer day he finally snaps, and it is Maria who sends him away from their home in Bialystok in rural Poland, fearing the consequences if he stays. Desperate and unsure, Jerzy heads for London where his old friend Jan has promised him work. At first he is completely disorientated. Worse, there's no sign of Jan. Feeling lost and adrift in the strange city, Jerzy overhears a young woman's cries. Memories of his sister stir him into action and he intervenes. The woman is Suzie Thomas, a drug addict dependent on local thug Paul Rogers for her supplies and for whom she turns tricks. Rogers also runs gangs of workmen around the city, and Jan works for him. Gradually Jerzy is dragged into Suzie's world, a violent dog-eat-dog existence of the underclass living next to but separate from London's affluent citizens. Jan has his own problems with Rogers, and when his...
