First of all, the senior editor and the editors of the class are grateful to their class president for the successful way in which he managed the affairs of the magazine as a former senior editor. They are also indebted to Ira Wilson Hoover for his active, energetic management of the Artistic Department and to William Arthur Warren, whose efforts in the same direction have made the illustrations of this number possible, in Mr. Hoover s absence. Far from any spirit of self-congratulation, the retiring board feels that much of this year s success has been due to the able support given by Nineteen-One to every project or innovation which Nineteen Hundred brought forward. Wishing the Juniors the richest success in their work on The Red And Blue, the Seniors leave to them a trust which they have considered all but sacred. LINES IN HIS DIARY. To him who haps upon this book I make one little prayer sincere, That he will take no second look Upon the acts recorded here. IN HIS BOOK. Reader, this work has what within Will fill a righteous hour, though long; Read it when others tempt to sin With drunken tale or ribald song. ON HIS TOMB. Passer, forbear to harm a bone Of one whose heart to Hell was sold. Read in his diary, not his tome, A wicked daily life re-told. at at HER FIRST APPEARANCE. When Gladys Meredith came to the city to...
