Paint the canvas with several coats of thin outside paint--white is the usual color for the roof. If roofing paper is used, it is a good plan to paint the boat and then lay the paper on, laying the side sheets first and overlapping with the next strip, and finally having the middle strip overlap the two adjoining ones. In putting in the windows, ready made casings and frames are purchased. The door jambs are made of inch thick, 2Vfc inch wide planed wood. The door should be made to open toward the inside. The jambs are fitted in first. The height from the deck to the underside of the carlin is measured--It will be about 4 feet 5 inches. Then make a T lap of the jambs, so the door will close against a half-inch strip of solid wood. (Fig. 18.) Two of these jambs are fitted in place, one on each side of the doorway. The lintel is laid against the carlin, after being sawed and draw knifed to fit. The other doorway is fitted in the same way. Then on all four outside corners of the cabin are fitted mouldings from gunwales to the roof. Along the top of the two gunwales, against the siding, are laid quarter-round strips -inch on a side. These strips, carefully daubed with white lead, are securely bradded in place, giving additional protection against the wind and waves. Steps from the deck to the cabin floor must...
