To rejoice with you that the difference between the infant and adult is so great, greater by far than is shown in the life histories of any other animal, because it permits in the case of every individual the successful intervention of proper environmental influences, and gives the possibility at least, of a rapid improvement of the race, and is indeed responsible for the great advances which man has made over the other animals. I have purposed to urge you to study the child as a distinct entity, in order that the natural advantages of this difference may be increased to the utmost for the benefit of the race. Those among you who have little ones, let me beg you to look upon them as possessed of great possibilities,...
