Excerpt from The Dungeon Harp: Being a Number of Poetical Pieces, Written During a Cruel Imprisonment of Three Years in the Dungeons of Beverley; Also, a Full Proof of the Perjury Perpetrated Against the Author, by Some of the Hired Agents of the Authorities I believe that the whole list Of British authors can not produce another instance of a man who wrote surrounded by circumstances less favourable to the play of imagination, or less calculated to favour the production of a work of this kind, than those in which the Author, without crime, and by the cold-blooded villainy Of mon sters in the human shape, was placed. Yet Peddie, with a long captivity before him, exposed to the super - inhuman cruelties of his merciless tormentors, nevertheless found means to convey to the world a knowledge of his sufferings, and for this purpose was his pen (as a poet) so frequently employed. Some of his Poems will bear a comparison with the best productions of modern times. How deeply his mind has been imbued with the love of liberty, may be learned from the evidence which his poems afford, - for he sang of freedom when in captivity, he spoke of pleasure in the midst of pain. To such men as Peddie must future ages be indebted for the victories which have yet to be gained. Posterity will do honour to the memory of the brave, who have struggled and perished for the love they bore their country and their kind and, when the principles of democracy are better understood, then will the virtues of the patriot become duly appreciated. Prejudice and cruelty must then retire before the influence...
