Studies in Architectural Style

By Richard Popplewell Pullan

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 222 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in. ALTHOUGH it is difficult to understand the reasons which have induced a scholar and architect of Mr. Pullan's reputation to publish this scratch collection of examples, which are not wisely called studies, we are grateful to him for the remembrance they awaken by means of nearly a hundred designs for buildings, including some instances of Romanesque character and others of Byzantine, Lombard, Geometrical, Gothic, Renaissance, and French origin. We do not agree with Mr. Pullan that, to the exclusion of other services, Gothic is best for ecclesiastical buildings, and we can only regard with curiosity the frankness which professes that the Italian or French Renaissance is the most suitable style for public offices and such like edifices, in which light and air are the chief necessities; and that pure classic, Greek or Roman, is best for museums or public buildings of a monumental character, where dignity of effect has chiefly to be studied. Was it in vain that Sir Charles Barry succumbed to Palmerstonian logic and force majeure, turned his masterpiece inside out, and took comfort in erecting as a...
